Trade In Services Agreement – The dangers of liberalising services

Thursday, 5 December 2013, 12:30 - 2pm

Tanjung Bena Meeting Room, 1st Floor, BNCC Phase 2

All welcome! (Info: Daniel.Bertossa@world-psi.org)

The Trade in Services Agreement is a significant departure from the usual multilateral process. Negotiated by only a small number of the WTO members it aims to significantly liberalise trade in services that are predominantly provided by large multinational corporations. However, the agreement risks deregulating sectors of the economy that are regulated for good reason. Public services, environmental services and financial markets all operate with significant public interest components. Water, energy, health and education are but a few examples of sectors where market provision cannot achieve the social objectives that governments, and the people they represent, demand. The recent financial crisis makes clear the profound risks of under-regulated financial markets.

Public Services International is pleased to present a panel of distinguished experts to discuss the risks and problems with radical liberalisation trade in services. This forum aims to shed light in dark corners: Why is a new services agreement required? Why must it be negotiated in secrecy outside the multilateral process? Why are so many developing countries refusing to participate? What benefit will it provide to the majority in the community?
